REPORT.

It will be seen by a comparison of this, with the annual report for 1881, that there has been considerable increase in the work done by this institution. The care taken to debar the undeserving from its privileges, together with the prosperity of the times, would naturally diminish the number of patients; but the population of the city is rapidly increasing, and the existence of the institution is becoming more widely known, so that, in spite of all proper caution, the number of applicants is likely to double within the next ten years. None who take time to consider the workings of this charity can fail to be strongly impressed with the great good it is accomplishing, by giving to the deserving poor such immense benefit as is gratuitously afforded, by medical care, as timely and skilled as can possibly be obtained, even by those able to pay. As will be seen by reference to the means of support, the income of the Dispensary is small, and it will be impossible to maintain its present standard of usefulness without the aid of contributions from its friends who have contributed so generously in times past, and to whom we look with confidence for continued liberality in the future.
